Learn German with 'WordBanker' Nova Pro Announced NOVA International, Inc. (OTC: NOVA) today announced an advanced processor technology platform for professional audio and video. "NOVA," which stands for Never Over Unified (sic), provides a fully integrated silicon audio and video DSP that delivers a much faster response time and enhanced stability with fewer internal power sources. This robust platform, announced in advance of the annual Consumer Electronics Show (CES) in January, enables designers to create new and better audio, video and multimedia solutions for professional and consumer applications at a lower cost. NOVA includes real-time GPU processing for real-time animated 3D graphics; stereo surround and asynchronous USB audio standard support for USB audio applications; DSP for high speed, high precision signal processing; and USB for connecting to audio and video devices. "We are creating the most sophisticated DSP platform in the market today," said Charles Mosser, a principal engineer in NORAD's (NORth American's) digital signal processing group. "The combined processing power of the real-time GPU and asynchronous USB eliminates the need for battery power, reducing power consumption from 18W to just 2W." The Platform's custom, high speed, high precision sound DSP is uniquely powerful. It is fully designed by NORAD's engineers and fabricated in the NORAD's state-of-the-art semiconductor fabrication facility, employing a high-

[adinserter] [/adinserter] New General Theory of Zipf's Law - pmoriarty ====== poormystic I first heard of Zipf's Law as an interesting regularity in protein sequences. For the abstract and detailed (good) paper I'd recommend ~~~ tom_mellior Hmm. That paper looks to me like a citation of Zipf's own work, but with a generalization to the protein field. I guess this is because ['s_law (which looks like a summary of this article) lists a paper _by_ Zipf as "The most frequently occurring word in any language is the one which has the largest number of different occurrences" and notes that the result can be generalized for words instead of being specific to only a single language. $9,421.00, for eighteen years
